14th I.A.O General Assembly
Astana, Kazakhstan, 19 – 23 June 2007

«The Inter-religious dialogue as a factor of peaceful and fair relationships among peoples»

Reflection text

1. The need to preserve and support man's rights and freedoms, at a national, regional, and international level. The comprehension of the concept of human rights and ethics governing them, and their contribution in the construction of a society without conflicts.
2. The contribution of the State, Church and religious organisations, in the spiritual evolution of the citizens. The lack of citizens' awareness mainly concerning religious consciousness of their geographic or social space, religious ignorance in general, as causes of negative radicalism and extremism. The contribution of the clergy, in man's effort to distinguish genuine faith from efforts for its misuse.
3. Religion as a unification and understanding force among peoples. The universality of Christian values: kindness, justice, peace, compassion and their contribution to the development and integration of the society. The role of religion to the shaping of thought, culture and moral values of the social system.
4. The problem of religious intolerance against men with different viewpoints, and the devaluing of their traditions. The collapse of society's moral principles as the cause of xenophobia, terrorism and extremism.
5. The problem of peaceful coexistence of different cultures and religions. The harmonisation of views contributing to the preservation of the world's diversity. The expectations generated by the inter-religious dialogue for the mutual understanding of men.
6. The broad inter-religious dialogue as a preventive means of the numerous conflicts of a religious background. The necessary conditions for the development of dialogue and the co-existence of cultures.
